Fine Brush Used by Chineses Is Still in Une. From the Chicago Tribune.

In any large city of this country in the same block, possibly in the same building, can be found in use to-day the first man for writing purposes. The Chinese laundryman of to-day marks his tickets

Steel pens are almost in universal use now and are made by the ton and in increasing volume every year.

Confucius used a hair brush for a pen, and his ancestors for thousands of years before his time. The reed came into use for writing in the marshy countries of the Orient. It was hollow and, cut in short lengths with sharpened ends, it was some improvement on the hair pen. The value of the quill was discovered at an early date in the history of civilization, and its use spread from the East over Europe and then to the New World. Before the day of the metal pen England annually was importing more than 23-000,000 quills for pens. They were from the swans of lecland, the Irish geese, the geese of the Hudson Bay country, &c. Early in the ninetcenth century the metal pen began to be used in England.

From the London Daily Globe. M. Jules Contant, the mayor of lvry, is

He has set up a powerful siren, not at all unlike, as far as sound goes, those in use on the great lirers. The alarm can be heard anywhere within a radius of six kilometers, or nearly four miles. The apparatus is not worked by steam, but by electricity. The principal ground of objection to the mayor's proposuls seems to have been based on prejudice—that the siren sounded at night would disturb the significant of ity. The mayor, however, requires some stronger reasons before he siyts heed to the malcontests.
